ABSTRACT

With the changing paradigm of information seeking pattern of researcher scholars, Academic Social Networking Sites (ASNSs) offer new ways to communicate, collaborate and gather knowledge. ASNSs bring researchers and researches at one place. Flexibility in exchange of ideas and open discussions lead to free flow of information. This paper provides insight of few ASNSs and what they offer to students and research scholars. ASNSs help scholars in research and learning, find popular topic, collation of resources, collaborative and peer-to-peer learning.

Abstract: This research provides a systematic analysis of 115 previous literatures on the use of academic social networking sites (ASNs) in scholarly communication. Previous research on the subject has mainly taken a disciplinary and user perspective. This research conceptualizes the use of ASNs in scholarly communication in the space between social interactions and the technologies themselves. Keyword analysis and scoping review approaches have been used to analyze the comprehensive literature in the field. The study found

- Below, you can select the rankings that you want to see alongside your Google Scholar search results. We recommend using: CORE for good coverage of computer science journals and conferences, SJR or BFI for broad coverage across all disciplines, and one of your preferred Economics / Business rankings (e.g., ABDC, AJG/ABS, VHB, ...).
- The remaining unselected rankings (if any are found) will still be available at any time via the "+" symbol next to your search results.
- You can change these settings at any time by clicking on the extensions symbol (resembling a puzzle piece) at the top right corner and clicking the extension symbol.
- Please note that the turbo-mode crawls the journal title directly from Google Scholar. When you do a very extensive literature search with many queries in a small timeframe, Google may think you are a bot and give you a CAPTCHA to solve or block you temporarily. Turning this option off for a while and deleting recent cookies should help.
- You can change all of these settings at any time by clicking on the extensions symbol (resembling a puzzle piece) at the top right corner and clicking the extension symbol.
- You can also pin the extension to your tool bar for quicker access.
